

One of the more tragic aspects of Prohibition was the “Jake Walk” - a very peculiar stiff-legged, often jerky gait afflicting people drinking a patent medicine known as Jamaican Ginger. Also known as “Jake”, this alcohol-based concoction turned out to have been contaminated with a neurotoxin by the shady characters attempting to slip their formula past the Dry Authorities.

The JakeWalk, the restaurant and bar, is dedicated to celebrating our good fortune to live in an age where we need never resort to drinking patent medicines to give us a little lift after a hard day’s work; where we’ve got more good things to drink—fine wines, old whiskies, cocktails and the like—than ever before, if we just know where to look for them. Here, at least, you will find some of them.

Welcome, friends.

Rosé

It ain't White Zin!

Although it's often called "summertime wine," rosé is the perfect quaff for relaxing on any day, whatever the temperature outdoors. Historically, rosé was a delicate and dry wine, like the rosé wines typically found in the Loire Valley. However, over the last century "bigger" rosés have gained popularity, like those made from the grapes from hotter climates like the Rhône Valley or Provence (Syrah, Grenache, Carignan & Mourvèdre.) Just as red wines get their color from the grape skins, rosé wines are carefully produced by removing the skins just before the liquid turns a deep red. The taste is always light, but most have overtones closer to reds, making some surprisingly good pairings with food. Most rosés are meant to be drunk the year of release. Though some are indeed quite suitable for aging a few years or more.

Abe Schoener

Abe Schoener has been called many things: genius, mad scientist, revolutionary... just to name a few. We think he's a rock star. Though, in his modesty, Abe would rather be known as a student. And he is. He prides himself on experimenting, researching and continuous learning all in the name of creating something amazing. And he does. A former philosophy professor at St. John's College, Abe is now a full-time winemaker. His California wines are called The Scholium Project. He also makes wine from local vineyards with the talented group at The Red Hook Winery here in Brooklyn. His winemaking style is, to put it lightly, unique. As is his nature, Abe brings wine to a philosophical level. His goal is not necessarily to achieve the "correct" expression of the grape, rather, he pushes the limit to see what the grape is capable of giving, knowing that nature has a lot more to give us if we just ask. What ends up in your glass is wine that makes you scratch your head in wonderment... from the first waft of aroma to the lingering beauty that stays with you as you sip.

Go ahead. See for yourself.

Giuseppe Quintarelli

Known to most as “The Master of the Veneto,” Giuseppe Quintarelli is ever the traditionalist, adhering to the techniques of his father and grandfather. He is driven by his own values, not by what others want from him. His grandson, Francesco Grigoli, says this to be the secret to his grandfather’s success: “It’s an obsessive quest for quality—in the whole process of winemaking, including the packaging: the details of the corks and the caps, labels made by hand, the type of glass for the bottles... And great, great patience. To wait for the product, to respect the evolution of the wine. And then, I think that my grandfather owes his success to his character, and pride, too. He was able to hold out during the less fortunate times in history. It’s true that we must understand market needs, changes in tastes ... But his wine is this, in front of you, and he always presented it without compromise.” Quintarelli himself says, “Our traditional methods and savors must not be abandoned or forgotten. More than anything else, one can never force nature. One must be calm, have the right method, and have a lot of passion.” He is most famous for his Amarones, which he only labels in exceptional vintages. In “lesser” vintages, he releases the same wine as Rosso del Bepi (Bepi is a nickname for Giuseppe). His other wines include a fresh white wine called Bianco Secco (Dry White), a young red wine called Primofiore (First Flower), the Valpolicella Classico, the Recioto della Valpolicella Classico, and his legendary Alzero.

Giuseppe passed away this past January.

Paolo Bea

Paolo Bea, similar to Quintarelli, is steeped in the artisanal and traditional methods of noninterventionist winemaking, which he shares with his sons, Giuseppe the farmer and Giampiero the winemaker. Harvesting, and most of the other work, is still done by hand. The wines are organically produced without pesticides or herbicides on a 40-acre estate, only 1/3 of which is dedicated to wine production. The staunch adherence to these methods, however, does not preclude them from taking advantage of modern technological developments that may that simply lessen the burden of winemaking. Bea does not use barrique, but you might see some of his wine aged in stainless steel. Umbria, sandwiched between Tuscany and the Marche, has been home to the Bea family in the town of Montefalco since the 1500’s. Though the region is most well-known for the Sangiovese varietal, the identity of Montefalco, and that of the Bea winemaking family for that matter, is more closely related to the indigenous grape, Sagrantino, a thick-skinned and intensely flavored variety that produces rich, complex and ageable wines. Paolo describes his philosophy toward winemaking by saying, “Nature should be observed, heard, understood, not dominated.” These are wines like no other.
